2024 Spring Season Outlook: The Hawks struggled out of the gate with a series loss against Villanova and a conference series loss against Towson. With their backs against the wall, the Hawks took 2 out of 3 against Drexel to remain alive for playoff play. While the room for error is minimal in the spring, the Hawks have shown they are capable of playing great baseball and will get a chance to prove that. While a 3-3 conference record is not ideal, the best baseball for the Hawks is most assuredly in front of them.

Manager Quote: “While having to replace top-notch starters that were a part of the conference winning season from a year ago, a slow start could have been expected for this year's Hawks. With younger players getting more opportunities and getting more comfortable as the season goes on, I have confidence that the team that showed up against Drexel can play consistently against the good teams we will see in the spring. We will be ready to go when the spring season starts to make a run at the conference and playoff play.” - Connor Scofield

2024 Spring Season Outlook: There are a lot of new young additions to this squad that have already made an immediate impact to the team. The depth we have devised in our bullpen is going to be a strong suit of ours along with our explosive bats that have emerged after some heavy hitters left us last year. There is always someone that steps up in the big moment letting us be able to pull through tournaments such as the Greenville Invitational and going 5-0. Being able to utilize all of our pieces will be a challenge, but in the long run it will create better results deeper into the season/playoffs.

2024 Spring Season Outlook:

Amidst the aftermath of a stellar 2022-23 season where the Penn State Baseball Club emerged victorious, winning the national championship with an impressive 27-3 record, a new challenge looms. Despite the departure of many players, the team's narrative does not change. The club does not rebuild; they reload in preparation for another title.

Under the guidance of head coach Mitch Miletics, the team remains focused in their pursuit: to reclaim the NCBA title. Their offense has set an early precedent, notching an impressive 26 runs in the initial three games, while the pitching staff diligently works on refining a strong rotation and bullpen.

Penn State's roster boasts an abundance of talent, complemented by an inextinguishable drive for success. With an unyielding determination from the coaching staff, the team stands as an unstoppable force, determined to bring the championship back to State College.

2024 Spring Season Outlook: Although the team ended the fall on a high note with a 2-0 conference record, we played less games than we had expected due to uncooperative weather typical in the Northeast. We face a busy spring schedule that includes two conference opponents (Penn State and SUNY Binghamton) who are also undefeated in conference play. This group nevertheless looks to build on the positive momentum from the fall and compete at a high level against tough adversaries in the spring.

Manager Quote: Our work is cut out for us in the spring with a schedule packed with matchups against strong opponents. That's the way we want it. First-year and returning players alike are hungry to battle through a challenging spring slate and improve our standing from the previous year on our path to the postseason.
